Invitation to Support

From the earliest days of digital preservation, experts have shared their experiences and research so that we can learn from each other and advance our practice. This philosophy has been a part of the iPRES conference since its inception in 2004, and it continues to be the guiding principle for everything we do.

It is our privilege to invite you to join us as a supporter as the International Digital Preservation Community connects with one another in Champaign-Urbana, Illinois, at the 19th International Conference on Digital Preservation, iPRES 2023.

Beginning on September 19th and continuing through the 22nd, the conference will take place at the I Hotel and Conference Center at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign, concluding with a day of repository and cultural tours in Chicago on September 23rd.

We are committed to building on our current relationships, expanding our reach, and sharing in the success of our efforts to build a community that will share knowledge and experiences across disciplines, sectors, and regions. We invite you to join us and support the work of the iPRES community and attendees.

Sincerely,

Two handwritten signatures in black ink. The first signature, on the left, is "Chris Prom" and the second, on the right, is "Tracy Seneca". Both are written in a cursive, flowing style.

Chris Prom & Tracy Seneca iPRES 2023 General Co-Chairs

Conference Format

We intend to offer iPRES 2023 as a hybrid event mixing face-to-face and online activities. We are strongly encouraging in-person attendance. The Conference will include the following events and features:

- Plenary Sessions (Opening and Closing ceremonies, Keynotes and Lightning Talks). These will be webcast live and available as recordings after the event for participants and non-registrants.
- Breakout sessions are to be held on location with capacity for online participation. These will be recorded and available to participants after the event.
- Social events, including a reception at the University of Illinois Memorial Stadium Colonnades Club with an awards Ceremony and conference dinner with entertainment at a historic, industrial, and elegant venue, as well as cultural events and repository visits in Chicago on September 23rd.
- An online-only strand to the conference so that remote attendees can participate and get a flavor of the local experience
- ‘Wrap around’ online sessions to support participation in different time zones, via Zoom platform and conference website
- Translations and captioning to support accessibility (subject to support/sponsorships)
- Online participation is chargeable at a reduced rate to cover costs of hybrid

Conference Theme and Topics

With the theme “Digital Preservation in Disruptive Times” iPRES 2023 will continue and enhance conversations undertaken by delegates to the 2022 meeting, even as we navigate a world under immense pressure:

- What does it mean to be a steward of community memories and archives in 2023? In the immediate wake of a global pandemic? During the climate crisis? During a time of war?
- What steps can we take to center and value those who have traditionally been excluded from our conversations?
- And most of all, how can we partner with these new voices to imagine a better future not just for cultural heritage institutions, but for society as a whole?

Whether we’re talking about the risks inherent to cloud storage, network fragilities, social media, artificial intelligences, algorithmic inequities, cryptographic arms races, economic fallouts, pandemic spillovers, or dystopian predictions, digital preservation will be vitally important to the future record of our planet. In disruptive times, our responsibility is not only to foster preservation, but also to ensure that society can make use of the incredible amount of data, information, and records that we are stewarding—or that have not been, to date, incorporated into our libraries, archives, and museums. Five core topics include:

Digital Accessibility, Inclusion, and Diversity

Who preserves our culture, and whose culture gets preserved? Digital Accessibility, Inclusion, and Diversity is calling us to extend beyond the status quo. We need to actively increase inclusion in our field, so that the diversity of creators and their work can be reflected in collections. We also need to increase the accessibility of the content we create, so that all scholars can have equitable access to information regardless of disabilities or disadvantages. To the end, we welcome proposals that consider the ways in which digital accessibility, inclusion, and diversity contribute to our work and communities.

Sustainability: Real and Imagined

What does sustainability mean now, and what might it mean in the future? By discussing Sustainability: Real and Imagined, we seek to build on the environmental perspective to consider the ecology of preservation. We want to consider sustainability across the entire lifecycle of digital information and focus on the ways in which sustainable preservation can be more complete, more equitable, and more innovative. We invite contributions that engage and challenge audiences to consider how sustainability, broadly construed, can deepen digital preservation initiatives.

We're All in this Together

How and when should digital preservation challenges be shared? We're all in this together, part of a global community working to preserve history for future generations. We want to hear ways that your institution or project fosters activities and initiatives that promote collaboration, especially initiatives working across disciplines or that address labor and staffing in digital preservation.

From Theory to Practice

How does research about digital preservation affect what we do, and vice versa? Due to the constantly changing nature of digital content and the technologies required to preserve it, digital preservation has always been a field in flux, where we move from theory to practice, and back again. Theory is an abstraction, a way of making sense of the world to better understand it and to shape solutions to real world problems. We, therefore, encourage submissions that discuss achievements, challenges, or failures in putting digital preservation theory into practice—as well as ways that our practice affects our research.

Immersive Information

What does it mean to be enveloped by ephemeral data, information, and records? As the memory landscape changes, should we preserve fluid content in fixed forms? Or should we create different—and seemingly more radical—preservation approaches? When peering into pools of immersive information, digital preservationists may need to take a leap of faith with new methodologies, technologies, or partnerships.

Expected Numbers and Types of Delegates

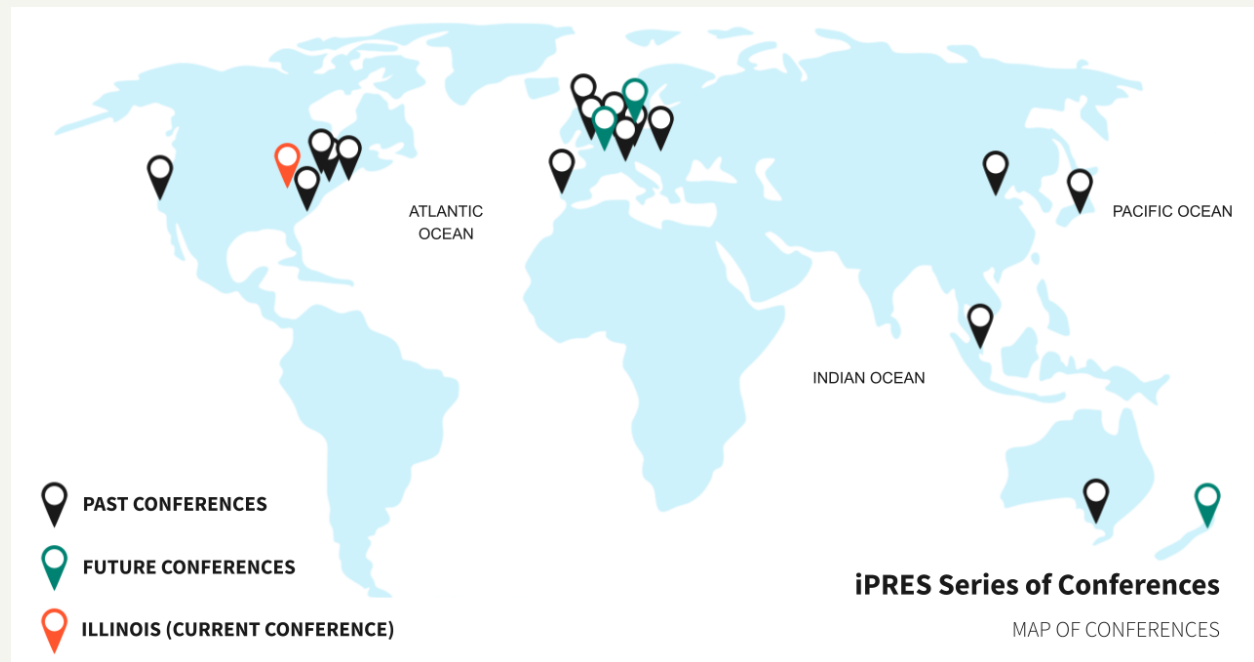

We expect that this conference will attract an audience of around 450 on-site participants from around the world, as well as an additional 250 online participants. During the call of volunteers, nearly 100 individuals from six continents volunteered to be part of the planning committee, indicating strong growth in the iPRES brand. Both the volunteers and expected attendees will include a mix of digital preservation subject experts, librarians, data scientists, archivists, and administrators/decision makers from academic, government, and non-profit organizations, including major research libraries and archives. This includes representatives from leading national libraries and archival programs. We are also anticipating that representatives from public and private funding agencies will be in attendance.

While we are planning for 450 on-site participants, we are developing contingency plans to allow for higher registration numbers, given capacity for a higher number of guests at the conference venue. We believe that three factors have placed the iPRES conference for growth and impact:

- The success of the Glasgow conference, which attracted 437 onsite participants, when the local committee was planning for 150.
- The preeminent role of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign as a leading land-grant institution with robust international support and programs
- The unique role that iPRES plays in the digital preservation community, with a unique blend of researchers and practitioners coming together in a shared space.

Previous meetings have been held all over the world:

Conference Organizing Committees

Conference Executive Committee

The Executive Committee comprises four members of iPRES 2023 and the chairs from the 2022 and 2024 conferences. The committee is responsible for the overall organization of the conference and committees, as well as ensuring continuity and knowledge sharing between successive conferences.

Program Committee

As the premier international digital preservation conference, iPRES supports and is supported by a broad and diverse community of researchers and practitioners engaged in the preservation of digital cultural heritage. The committee reflects this global community and consists of a large group of colleagues who advise, design, and develop the conference program and ensure and validate the quality of the conference in terms of content, achieving a balance of theory and practice which enables a sustained and useful dialogue across all the different sectors and partners with an interest in digital preservation.

Local Organizing Committee

The iPRES 2023 Local Organizing Committee consists of seven members from the host institutions, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and Chicago Collections Consortium. The committee meets on a weekly basis and participates in other committees to help facilitate and coordinate work. Members are responsible for the conference space, technology, catering, social events, registration, finance, and other local logistics.

Other Committees

The Program Committee consists of several functional committees that guide the planning and development and move forward the work of the conference. These committees each consist of several co-chairs and members who ensure that prospective participants (including those who are new to iPRES) are informed of important dates and logistics, that necessary milestones are met, and that the conference program is developed. These committees include the Communications Committee; Papers and Panels Committee; Posters and Lightning Talks Committee; Workshops and Tutorials Committee; First-Time Participants Committee; Remote Participation Committee; and the Ad-Hoc Program Committee. In addition, the Chicago Organizing Committee is responsible for arranging tours and professional site visits to Chicago.

Venue

A contemporary designed four-star property featuring 125 luxurious hotel room accommodations in Champaign, Illinois. The Hotel and Conference Center is located on the south campus of the University of Illinois in the heart of The Research Park. The adjoining 70,500 square foot state-of-the-art Illinois Conference Center features 16 conference rooms; a modern 12,200 sq. ft. exhibit hall, two large ballrooms, and thirteen meeting rooms. In addition, we have held additional room blocks at a variety of hotels in Champaign-Urbana.
